Managing Partner Ronald Shechtman Quoted in NY Post Article About Employee Lawsuits

The November 3, 2008 edition of The New York Post featured an article entitled “Rough Justice – Workers Are Suing Their Employers In Growing Numbers, But Many Have Cause To Regret It.” In the article, author Brian Moore discusses the consequences faced by employees when they choose to sue current or former employers, including high legal fees and emotional stress.

Ronald Shechtman, Pryor Cashman Managing Partner and Chair of the firm’s Labor Group, told The New York Post: “Many employees read stories and hear tales, and they have a vision of a great pay day and an employer capitulating, but they often get what they don’t expect. For starters, among the things they’ll likely get is a vigorous defense, because large employers want to send a message to other workers, while smaller firms fight back out of a sense of outrage.”
