Partner Joshua Zuckerberg Discusses NFL Salary Cap With Street & Smith's Sports Business Journal

Partner Josh Zuckerberg was quoted in a September 7, 2009 story in Street & Smith's Sports Business Journal entitled "NFL Sides Prepare for Uncapped Year."

As reported in the article, the possibility exists that there will not be a salary cap in place for the 2010 NFL season. It all depends upon whether the League and union officials enter into a new CBA prior to March 2010.

Zuckerberg, a partner in Pryor Cashman's Labor Group who has represented both union and management interests, told Street & Smith's that "most player unions support free-market conditions. What I am wondering about is whether there are players within these ranks who are more vulnerable in a purely market-driven economy and who may have benefited more from structured payment minimums."
